

Selling to identity

Based on the fact that the greatest power of man is to try to maintain his self-defined identity.

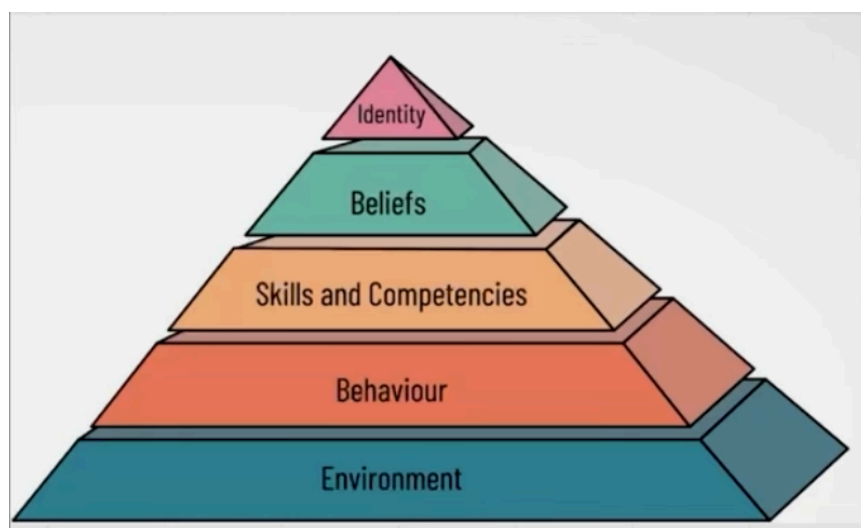

In a sales call you can dig into all these different parts. But the higher up you go in the pyramid the higher leverage those questions/frames will have.

You can ask questions about what they have done so far - find out why they are where they are

You can ask about what skills they have trained and invested in in the past - find potential bridges

You can ask questions about their beliefs - if they are limiting you can break them down one by one, because they will never buy unless they are completely convinced and trust that each part of the process will take them to their goal

But you can also get into who they actually want to be, their identity - because if they realize that it is not an external problem or even a skills problem and you show them that everything just has to do with who they tell themselves they are - then they will "step into" that version of themselves. If it means they have to take action to become the person who "always gets what they want," they will buy.

Why it works

Real urgency - Instead of creating false urgency (through nasty and pushy techniques), you expose them to who they can actually be, and in them a strong urgency is created to keep that promise to themselves

Understand people on a deeper level - Instead of asking them basic and salesy questions from a general script, you ask questions that require you to understand why you are even asking them.

Helpful motive - Instead of only selling them on helping them change their behaviors and tout their skills, you focus on who they actually want to become. In a way, you help them more than anyone else with what is most important to them. More helpful = better sales.

Identity gap framework sequence

1 - Get them to acknowledge their identity

- "Where does your drive to change things come from?"
- This will get you to why, what they answer is the identity they want (desired identity)

2 - Find a limiting belief that has been holding them back

- "What has been stopping you internally from solving this problem?"
- Find out how long they have been waiting and thinking, then find out what it is that has stopped them in the first place.
- This is the belief they must sacrifice to step into their desired identity

3 - Connect the question to identity

- "The reason I'm asking is because I can give you everything you need, but if you're not the person who can even get results, it won't help"
- "It's about being the version of yourself that naturally gets the results"
- Justify your deep questions and make them understand what needs to happen (they need to accept the identity they want)
- Here you create the gap in their identity, you inform them that you have to BE who you say you are, not just pretend to be.

4 - Create pain in current identity

- "Are you okay with staying the version you are right now (that has the limiting belief)?"

- "Why not?"

5 - Create real urgency through consequences

- "Where do you see yourself in two years if you stay the way you are now?"
- "If we stay the way we are now, how will it feel?"

6 - Position your victim as the identity bridge

- Your product is what can help them transform their identity

Questions that tear off the mask and let you speak to the real person:

"What kind of person do you see yourself as right now?"

"What is the cost of staying the way you are right now?"

"How much longer do you want to be this version of yourself?"

Seller Identity

Level 1 - Seller Identity

- Focuses on selling
- Speaks from a place of scarcity and need
- Worries about objections
- Tries to convince

Level 2 - Consultant Identity

- Focuses on problem solving
- Operates from knowledge/expertise
- Confident in abilities

Level 3 - Transformation guide identity

- Focuses on transforming their identity
- Operates from abundance, certainty
- Unattached to the outcome
- Cares about the person's best interests

How to do the transformation yourself

- Stop caring about your commission - the less needy you are the more you sell
- Live in genuine abundance and believe in the transformation of identity
- You must genuinely believe in the person you are helping, care more about them than your commission
- You must first do the identity transformation yourself before you can help others do it - step into the identity as a leader and a professional (transformation guide)
