

Language fixing

The best way to sell is a straight line.

But your prospects will start to get out of line so you have to bend them back into the straight line.

One way to predict whether they will bend the line in the end is their language.

1. Wishful thinking

- a. When they use too much
- b. "I wish that..."
- c. "I would like..."
- d. Solution: Call out their BS and ask what they actually need
- e. Ex: "It would be nice to make 100k/m"
- f. "Yes and it would be nice to be on the beach right now, tell me what you actually need"

2. Minimizing their problem

- a. They express themselves emotionally about how it "isn't that bad"
- b. This dampens urgency: If there is no urgency, they will do less to actually fix the problem
- c. Solution: Re-frame their mindset so they see the "minimization" as part of the problem
- d. Ex: "I mean... it's not that bad"
- e. "Don't you think that could be part of the problem? ... If we keep saying to ourselves that it's not that bad, where is the motivation to actually change anything?"
- f. "I don't really know"
- g. "Can I give you a new perspective?" ... "If you were playing a football game and one of your teammates didn't care if you won or lost, would you want him on the team?"
- h. "No"

- i. "Why not?"
- j. "Exactly... there's no real feeling that pushes him forward, so be completely honest now... (insert an event that symbolizes his problem)... how does that make you feel?"

3. External language - victim mindset

- a. They don't take responsibility for their problem, blaming everything external they can.
- b. This means they won't be convinced that you can fix the problem, because they don't believe that anything can help them.
- c. Solution: Tell them about someone else in their exact situation who is making it work anyway
- d. Ex: "I mean... it's just harder in today's economy"
- e. "So that's how it is, can I share a perspective with you?"
- f. "We've worked with a lot of agents who have made it work despite today's economy. So what do you feel you might be missing when it comes to generating leads... or maybe how you take care of them so that things are inconsistent?"
- g. Get them to search internally for their real problem.

4. ambiguous language

- a. "I think..."
- b. "Probably..."
- c. "It should be..."
- d. This indicates doubt, they won't buy if they doubt. What they need is certainty.
- e. Solution: Repeat what they said so they understand that it is unclear
- f. Ex: "I think I will do it"
- g. "Think?"
