

Structure Training (Recap)

Fundamentals

1. Authority

- Look the part
- Fitness → jacked, business → more formal
- Sound like someone with it
- Strong voice, sound comfortable
- Speak and appear confident
- Good setup and background

2. Funnel

- A sales structure works like a funnel. You start very broad, and it gets narrower the further into the conversation you go.
- Your job is to make sure the person has done/understood everything they need to make a decision.
- The further down you go, the more specific you need to be. You can't keep using cookie-cutter questions.

3. Use their words

- You have to work with the conversation you have, not the one you want
- So you have to stick to their words. They might use the word "stress," but you might interpret it as fear or frustration. Use the word "stress" anyway.
- Your words mean little. Their own words are gospel.

Overall sales structure

The Opening

- Everyone has needs, but what needs you have are relative to where you are in life

- Broke people will find themselves lower down in the pyramid. Because we can't start worrying about security if we don't have food. And we can't worry about how we're perceived if we don't even have security, e.g., a well-paying job.
- These needs are very clear; they aren't that hard to identify because they are more fundamental.
- More successful people will have their own needs. Usually one of the higher-level ones, since they've got the underlying ones covered. Like esteem and belonging. But remember that everything is relative. A rich person might also need security. If, for example, a billionaire loses several billion dollars, they'll be in a really bad spot in their own eyes. But still rich in everyone else's.

- What they're looking for (we'll figure that out through questions) = what they don't have. What they don't have = PAIN
- People who are satisfied with their lives don't jump on sales calls
- Your goal with this part of the call is to get as MUCH LEVERAGE as possible so you can then get them to do something out of character.
- TONE: Open and curious
 - Don't let them pigeonhole you as a "telemarketer"
- Don't use strict agendas. Don't say you only accept YES or NO. You don't want to create resistance. IF you have one, be open about it.

What made you schedule this call?

What kind of help are you looking for? ← Your goal: Identify a goal or a problem

The first part of this call is just to see where you are with X and where you want to be in order to create a tailored plan, and then perhaps go over possible steps moving forward. ← An open and light agenda

I like working with people who are in the stage of transitioning from someone who's still working—maybe an 8-to-5 job—but wants so much more, to someone with their own business and so on. [PERSON] always says that people go from order takers to action takers. ← An identity hook that creates leverage for the future

Situation

- Be straightforward and curious; pay attention to your tone
- You don't have to know everything about their problems either. Just enough so you can dive deep into their pain points.
- No more than 20 minutes

Problem

- Here, you dig into their pain. Because it's pain that creates urgency.
- Problem vs. symptom. The pain lies in the symptoms, not the problem. It's the little things in their daily lives that make their lives feel harder.
- Identify their needs, start with the pyramid, and address the ones further down that are more fundamental.
- Improvement opportunity. → When it comes to improving someone's situation in a specific area—meaning they're at an intermediate level in what they do—you want to create doubt about their current method and get them to admit that it's their fault. No external factor should be involved. Otherwise, you'll never change anything.
- New opp → Get them to admit that their current opp (job, business, situation, whatever) is what is causing them pain.
