

Objection training (recap)

Smoke screen objections (not real)

Reasons:

- Fear
- You haven't built enough rapport

Whether they're scared or you haven't built enough rapport, you need to slow down. When they're scared, their thoughts will run fast. It's important to set the pace right. Let them think, let them understand what you're saying.

Action: When they say "I need to think about it" or "...talk to my partner" take a sip of water. This gives you time to think, but also sets the pace so they can absorb what you're saying.

It all depends on how they perceive you (trustworthiness). If you're too fast → stress, feeling like you're pushy and trying to sell them out, excuses. If you're chill, calm, collected → You come across as someone who actually wants to listen to them and understand them.

"I have to think about it"

- Calm down - sip water
- Answer: "Just so I can give you the best info... What do you feel you need to think about?"
- Important: do NOT say it in a straight-forward pushy way, be nonch and avoid neediness (they know you want to ask them that)
- Move on to money obj.

"I have to talk to my partner"

- Calm down
- Answer: "Just so I can fully understand you... what would that convo MOST be about?"
- If they are sure it would be about the money → go to money obj.
- If they say it really HAS to be because that is how they make decisions (excuse) → go to decision making process

Another smoke screen (or the ones above)

- Use the same method to validate the obstacle as if they said it is too much money. Ask if they would do it if their partner wasn't involved or if they said yes.
- If they say YES, you can also check (to avoid future obj.) if the investment would work for them if they just talked to their partner. Ask one more time just to be absolutely sure, otherwise move on to money obj.
- If they DON'T talk about money at all, you can ignore it (as a real obj.) from now on. Because money is always the elephant in the room.

Niche Smoke screens:

"I need to talk to someone (testimonial)?"

- Ask them what they think will happen
- Get them to admit that they know they will only have positive things to say
- "Are you looking for ways to do this or are you looking for ways not to do it? Why?"
- Clarity reframe (you know this)
- Ask what is actually stopping them

"I need to talk to other companies

- First you need to understand what they want to know from others
- Answer: "Okay, no problem, just so I know if I can help, what is it that you want to know from them?"
- If they just want to see other options → Clarity reframe
- If they say they always make decisions then → Go to DMP.
- If it is a real (money, time value) obj. → Go there

Real objecitons

- Money (9/10 times)

CDR- Clarify, defuse, reframe

First clarify you:

"What do you mean?"

Then you refute their obj.

"Okay, no problem..."

Three more questions in a row to identify that it is actually about money:

"Money aside - would you do it?"

"Why would you do it?" ← Get them to back up what they just said

"But why invest your time in doing something that gives you X goal?" or

"Program aside, why invest in yourself to achieve the goal?" ← Get them to tell you, in their own words, why their emotional why is more important than the money

Always make them see it as you are doing your technology FOR them, and not TO them.

Then you re-frame the money (if necessary)

If it is an ROI sacrifice (they want to earn more)...

Most often, you distinguish between problems and symptoms. You position what they see as a problem, i.e. that they don't have the money, as a symptom of their real problem. Which is that they don't have the information to earn enough.

Example: "What is the real problem and what is the symptom here?"

"So the real problem is that we don't have the information to earn what we want, and the symptom is that we don't have the money"

"Do you agree with that?"

"Why?"

Give them an easy two-fold question:

"What is riskier... finding a way to get the money so you can solve the real, real problem, or continuing to focus on the symptom and never doing anything about it, making it even worse?"

Always say their upcoming choice last because it's easier to respond to what you just heard.

Immediately after, you always ask "Why?"

After that, you double down again and ask what actually happens if they don't change anything. A good example:

"What would the daily consequences be if things were just the way they are now?"

- Time

Quick summary of real obj.

1. We identify what the obstacle is
2. We ask permission to rephrase
3. We rephrase
4. We offer a two-fold choice
5. Get them to double down on why
6. Then we dig up consequences if it doesn't happen

Decision-making process

(if they still don't want to take the plunge or if they have their own ways of making decisions that don't help them)

- Partner

What you want to do is break down the problem and find out if it's even a problem at all, and if it is, make them realize that it's only their responsibility to improve themselves.

So first ask:

"If you went and told your wife you wanted to do this, but she didn't agree, would that change your final decision, or what?"

If NO → Sell right away

If YES → Continue

Ask permission to give them a tip. Ask who is actually responsible for changing the situation:

"Who is responsible for getting you to your goal?" ← Don't stop until they understand that they alone are responsible

"That reminds me of a Shakespeare quote... 'Uneasy is the head that wears the crown'

Have you heard that before?"

After they agree:

"So is it fair for you, if we think you are responsible, to take your crown off and put it on ___?"

"Why not?" ← Get their backing dirrrrrekt

Again, just like with the money obj. we give them a two-fold decision to make.

"You will have a conversation with them, but the question is just which type do you want.. which one would you choose?... That you go to them with all these problems that you wanted to solve but didn't, and that you have a rent to pay (in terms of ROI sacrifice). Or that you go to them and show them how you have already solved the problem and lead them to that choice?" ← Frame it as taking different roles in the conversation, one is a man with the same problems as before, and one is a leader who contributes confidently to those close to him

"And if she says 'nooooo, you will earn too much and buy a lambo and leave me for a 20-year-old' then we will give you a refund, okay?" ← then ease all tension with a little humor

"The money is not the problem; it is about whether or not you are fully committed. So are you fully convinced that you want to do this or not?"

If → YES

"So what do we have to do to reach the goal?"

60% most of the time this is all that is needed.

- I always make decisions this way (need to wait, MUST 1000% ask the wife etc.)

You can also ask them if this is how they always make decisions, but be sure first.

"Okay, I get you... this is a pretty cliché question, but on a scale of 1-10, if 1 is that you are very unhappy with where you are and 10 is that you are living your dream life... where would you say you are right now?"

If 5-10 → check what they are assuming (what is a ten to you really and what is a five?) Here you can humble them if you notice that it is necessary.

If 1-4 → Continue

"Okay, why a ___?"

The goal here is to get them to accept that they are not where they want to be financially. The steps are therefore to first accept their situation as not being enough. Then (below) get them to accept that mindset plays some role, and that they realize that it is their mindset that they need to change - because their current one has brought them to this situation.

"Okay, I hate the word 'mindset'... but do you agree that mindset... or mindset... can make us change the way we make decisions?"

"So are you okay with letting your current mindset, which gives you a (e.g. 4) on the scale, determine your results and your life going forward?"

If NO → "Why not?"

"I appreciate you saying this... and I know that right now we want to (e.g. sleep on it, talk to family, etc.) Which I understand... because we all make decisions based on our perspectives..."

The problem is that if we continue to make decisions the same way we did before, when we haven't succeeded in what we really want, it will be much harder to change anything." ← Position their mindset as the problem

"In order for us to change anything, we have to start adopting a new perspective. So if we look at (the dream version of the person, e.g. 20k/m Johan). How would he make a decision? Should he wait one day, which turns into two, which turns into three, etc. Or should he dive right in and bet on himself?" ← Positioning changing the mindset as the solution

"Why that?"

As usual, we always ask a twofold question before the commitment question:

"Oh, so right now we're at a crossroads. We can either continue making decisions as before and get exactly the same result... or we can make a different type of decision so that we reach (their goal) that we promised ourselves. Which would you choose?"

If YES...

"What happens if you don't do it then? What happens if you continue making decisions the same way as before?" ← Straight to the consequences

"Do you want to stay in the same vicious spiral?"

"So what do you want to do now?" ← Commitment

If they keep pushing...

"I get that we can double-check ourselves until we forget it... why not triple and triple check it? But do you feel that with what we have been through, you will reach the goal? ← If they are arguing about double checking

"Because look at it this way, when you get on an airplane, do you go into the cockpit and ask what exactly all the buttons do? Or do you sit down, put on your seatbelt, and trust us to take you where you want to go, because we've taken so many people there before?" ← Here we remind you of authority, guarantee, and previous proof

"We know how this works, so what we need from you is for you to sit down and put on your seatbelt..."

"But what does it actually change in the end?" ← If they don't want to give in, you need to disconnect what they want to get out of double-checking from what you're actually helping them with

If they continue → Enter fear

Summary:

1. Get them to accept their current position
2. Position their mindset as the problem
3. Position changing their mindset as the solution
4. We offer a two-fold choice
5. Get them to double down on why
6. Then we dig up consequences if it doesn't happen
 - I only need 24 hours (a specific one, you can solve it as above or a more direct way like below)

BEFORE YOU GO INTO THIS, YOU MUST DO THE SAME MONEY-VERIFICATION AS WITH ANY OTHER SMOKE SCREEN (to make sure it's not the money that's the problem)

"You can definitely take a day and think about it... check this out; at the end of the day, I'm just here to help you..."

So I can explain why it might not be the best solution without getting you upset?"

Okay...

"So it seems like we're going to make a really big change, right?"

"And when we decide to make a big change, when is the best time to do it if we're 100% committed?"

"It was probably 6 months ago, and the next best time is right now. Do you agree?" ← Here you can also add a New Year's resolution analogy and ask why they agree

"Why do you agree?"

"And, look, I just want to help you get the best results okay... when it comes to making a big decision and making a change... if we're that person who in December says they're going to lose a ton of weight first starting January 1st... and they wait... how long do those people actually stick to their goal?"

If they say they don't know → Explain that it's about two weeks max, then ask why

"Why not so long?" ← Make them realize that their "procrastination" mindset is a bigger problem than they think, that they actually have less chance of changing anything long-term

The key here is to describe their mindset as a commitment problem. Are they 100% committed or not?"

If they say it's not a month but just a day...

"If you're the person who says on a Friday that we're going to start a diet on Monday... during Friday, Saturday and Sunday, do you think we're moving towards our goal or away from it? Because we never stand still in life."

"Exactly, we walk away from our goal... so you can absolutely take a day and walk away from your goals, but we know that how we do one thing is how we do all things..."

So if you tell yourself it's okay to walk away from your goals...

Why would I let you in if I really cared about you and that you would get the best outcome?" ← Shows rough status and trustworthiness

LESS direct → "Why would I let you walk away from this conversation if I cared..."

"What happens if we keep telling ourselves it's okay to walk away from our goals?" ← consequence

- Fear obj.

ONLY AFTER YOU'VE WENT THROUGH MONEY OBJ, PARTNER OBJ, OR OTHERWISE AFTER SMOKE SCREENS AND THEY'RE STILL AFRAID... (and refuse to take the plunge)

Their fear is a non-logistic, underlying, secret belief that they just need a little help changing.

The problem is that they have their guard up when you give them different reframes to shift their mindset, you simply need a pattern interrupt where you let them open up.

ABC → Admit, Befriend, Convert meaning

Admit:

So they say something that shows that they are actually just scared...

"I think that hope is... I don't want to use scary... but it's a little scary, isn't it?"

Befriend:

"I understand how you feel, because I've been there myself, and what you're feeling is exactly what you should feel. Who grows in their comfort zone anyway?"

"So that feeling you're feeling means that you're growing in some way, because if you were sitting there completely cold as a corpse, something would be wrong, right? (might need to check your pulse)" ← Seriously + defuse

Convert meaning:

"That feeling won't go away, so the question is how do we use it..."

or 2 - We shape it into an action, into action, and now that we've taken a risk - then it has to work. Then we have to step into becoming that (goal) version of ourselves.

So what do you choose? Let the feeling stop you or shape it into taking a big step?"

"Why though?" ← Don't let them say "but..." Ask directly about the consequence before they can yip. If you control what they think, you control what they do

"What happens if you let it stop you though?"

Are you going to let it happen?"

"So what do we need to do to reduce the risk of it happening and us not reaching (goal)?"

Go to sell.

- They still can't move on

Take them out of auto-pilot mode.

Speech mode:

"Becoming the version we need to be is tough because our old self is holding on for dear life..."

I know that for me, when I always have to make a big decision, I have two different voices in my head. I have one that says I should do it right away and then I have one that says I should chill and wait... Do you get what I mean?"

← This needs to be done so that they disconnect their fear from themselves

"That's interesting and it's completely normal... I call it my bitch voice and my boss voice. The bitch voice will always say things like 'I can't do it' or 'I have to wait'..."

While the boss voice always says "You have to do something, you have to bet on yourself. You have to stop sitting on the bench and start being the person you know you should be." ← What you're really doing here is telling them what they have to do, but it's not a callout because it exists in a quote

"These voices won't go away, but do you agree that the voice I choose to listen to always gets louder? Most people listen to their bitch voice so much that you don't even hear their boss voice anymore..."

But since you're on this call, you still have that voice, right?"

"So right now... and I know it's a tough decision... but which voice do you want to be louder, the bitch voice or the boss voice? Why?"

"So let me listen to it right now... what does it say?" ← What you speak, you also think

"Why does it say that?"

Consequence:

"But what happens if you keep listening to the bitch voice and let the boss voice get weaker and weaker? And continue like that for the rest of your life?"

"Are you allowing that to happen?"

"So what do we have to do for you to go to bed tonight knowing that today you did exactly everything you could to actually change your life, achieve (goal) and (get their emotional outcome)?"
